of a heir Rites and Performances.

(From the Boston Transcript.)

One evening last Pebruary, during our stay in Algiers, we were informed that the Danieing Dervishes, or Aussaoui, as they are called, were to give a performance. Accordingly that evening, having procured a guide, we proceeded to the place where the performance was to be given, driving through the narrow streets connecting the French with the Moorisb quarter of the town, until they became so narrow and winding that it was impossible to go farther. Here we left the carriages in a small square, where four flat stones imbedded in the ground marked the spot where prisoners were formerly beheaded, and walked on through the narrow, dimly-hybred street, and on arriving at our destination were ushered into a large old Moorish house with its central open court, galleries, and communicating-rooms. On two sides of this court, which was lighted by flickering candles, are benches for spectators, while before them perhaps fifty Arabs in their picture-que costumes were sitting cross-legged, smoking and drinking coffee. In the centre of the court was a large square carpet, upon which was a brazier of burning charcoal, and behind it was a lighted candle six musicians were seated, in the centre of theomy was the master of ceremonies or high priest of the order, an intelligent-appearing Arab of perhaps forty years of age. In the gallery immediately above us, partially concealed by screens of rigs and shawls, were many Moorish women, and when the exercises became exciting one could occasionally eatch a glimpse of a pretty Lace. At a given signal the louste commenced. The instruments were immense tambourines, perhaps two and a half feet in diameter, which they tuned to the right musical patch by occasionally heating them over the charcoal fire. The noise produced by these instruments was dealening and morotonous. two and a half feet in diameter, which they tuned to the right musical pitch by occasionally heating them over the charcoal fre. The noise produced by these instruments was deafening and morotonous. They continued pounding steadily for perhaps twenty minutes with no result, when all at once a young man rushed into the centre of the circle with a scream and commenced to dance and gesticulate wildly. He was immediately seized by the attendants, who divested him of his outer garments and ornaments. He then, with a vacant, staring expression, began to dance wildly before the tall candle. It could hardly be called a dance, as his feet were stationary.

simply threw his head and body stationary.

He simply threw his head and body backward and forward, all his muscles being completely relaxed, his head almost touching the flame of the candle as it swing forward. His face soon became red and he began to froth at the mouth. He was soon joined by two others. An attendant kept them in line, not allowing them to get too near the candle, and occasionally joining their hands. Soon a wild-looking, emeciated old man sprang into the centre of the circle with a scream. After he had been divested of his outer garments he did not dance, but commenced pointing, with wild screams, at different persons in the room. He then placed his heel in the centre of the burning charconluntil the smoke and the odor of barning flesh falled the room. This performance was rendered more effective by his continual screams and by the uncarthly noise of the tambourines. He then withdrew tinual screams and by the uncarthly noise of the tambourines. He then withdrew his foot, and a red-hot shovel having been handed to him, he rapidly struck it with his open hand and then drew his finger slowly across it, producing, probably, a slight blister. A heavy, sharp-pointed instrument was then handed to him, which the old man placed against his abdomen and proceeded to pound grainst the other end with a heavy brick, which he broke into several fragpound against the other end with a heavy brick, which he broke into several frag-ments. He then, with apparently great effort, pretended to withdraw it, but as its withdrawal was not followed by blood, and member of the order has recently died from the effect of swallowing nails. After he had finished his performance he resumed his seat, adjusted his garments, receiving many congratulations from his friends. The music then became more furious and deafening, and the uprear was increased by shrill screams of encouragement from the women above, and shortly three new men rushed into the circle—two light-complexioned Arabs and a negro—dancing and screaming. Three red-hot shovels were handed them, which they struck as the first performer had dene, while one of the number took the red-hot shovel between his teeth and held it there until there was a distinct odor of burning flesh. They then took the red coals from the brazier, chewed, and swallowed them, while the black froth ran from their mouths. Two large portions of prickly cactus, covered with long, sharp needles, were then handed to there. These they seized, furiously struggling for the largest portions, which they chewed and swallowed—meanwhile frothing and foaming at the mouth. How the Hency-Makers Are Taken Care of at an Apiary-Their Culture as a Science.

[Philadelphia Times, 28th.]

In a heautiful glen surrounded by woodlands and close to the ripping Wissahickon stands a quaint, old fashioned farmstead. Here were congregated yesterday, on a space eleared around the house, some thirty ladies and gentlemen, whose conversation was entirely devoted to the relative merits of various kinds of bees and their culture, while one of their number introduced them to his large colony of honey-collectors. It was the special summer meeting of the Philadelphia Bee-Keepers' Association. The farm was Vice-President Arthur Todd's bee- and poultry-farm, at Kitchen's lane, Germantown. He is from the old country, and has only been in America a few years, but has already identified himself with spiarlan interests in this country. In his yard are arranged more than eighty wooden boxes, some of them three stories in height. These are the haves.

Each hive contams a family of from thirty to forty thousand bees. These are supplied with a sheet of artifically-prepared wax comb, on which to build their cells at the rate of about twenty-five to the square inch. In each box from five to eight of these combs are placed and in each comb the basy little workers store from three to five pounds of honey.

"Now, ladles and gentlemen," said the

and the seed is good feed for the poultry. I shall in that way obtain three crops from my one outlay. It is also possible that out of my abundance of blooms I may send some to market for sale, as they are a beautiful flower, and I may also make the experiment of making bread of the seed-flour. That is done in Spain, where the sunflower receives the title of 'the gift of heaven.'"

The party thence returned to the beevillage and resumed the inspection of the

As Prime Minister of Prusia Bismarch has no sainty, but as Chancellor of the German Empire be receives 64,600 marks ($13.500) per annum. The remainder of his income is derived principally from Issaded property, of which he possesses a considerable quantity. Owing, however, to the very low prices of grain and timber, particularly of late years, his receipts from this raince are comparatively small. It Bismarck were simply a nobleman, or evon a count, he might be considered wealthy; but for a prince he can only say he is moderately well off. Down to 1857 his only landed property was Schonhansen, in the Altmark, which contains about 2,800 acres of generally excellent land. In 1867 he added to this the manor of Varzin, in Hinter Pomerania, which he purchased with the grant of 400,000 thelers ($288,000) voted to him by the Landiag. This estate, to which he subsequently added the properties of Chorow and Seditiz, covers an area of about 20,000 acres. It consists for the most part, however, of poor land, some of it being searcely fleven to grow firs. After the events of 1870 the Emperor, in his capacity of Sovereign Duke of Lauenburg, presented the Chanceller with the Sachsenwald, lying in the Schwartzenbeck district, not tar from Hamburg, and stretching down to the Kibe. It had previously been Crown land, and comprises an area of about twiny thousand acres, covered for the most part with magnificent beech forests. The Prince has recently added to this estate, on which there was neither arable land nor a residence of any sort, the small properties of Schonau and Silt. the briefest interval could now remain.

At last the night, long as it was, began to draw to an end. The chill which precedes daybreak pervaded the air, and in the eastern sky the first pale gleam of morning began to show itself. This must be the signal for the long pent-up anger of heaven to show itself. Satan was even now being loosed from his bondage. But no; the light grew stronger in the beavens, and the flame of the candles paled before it, and at last the rays of the risen sun streamed through the windows and fell on the white and auxious faces of the watchers. The night had passed away. A new day, a new year, a new century, had begun. The terror which had possessed their souls was after all, God be thanked for it, a delusion.

One of the most novel trials on record One of the most novel trials on record took place on a passenger train of the Memphis and Little Rock railroad between Lonoke and Little Rock. Judge F. T. Vanghan, of the Circuit Court, was on the train. After it left Lonoke county a man named G. B. Farmer, of that county, was arrested by a deputy sherff. The charge against the prisoner was for carrying a slung-shot. The law in Arkansas against carrying deadly weapons is rigidity enforced. When the prisoner learned that Judge Vaughan was on the train he went to him and begged for an immediate trial. He said that his wife was sick, and he did not want to be taken away from her. The learned Judge is a character in his way, and said that he would try him at once. He declared the

[Notes and Queries.]

Lord Palmerston's country residence is well known to have been near Romsey. Hants. In the course of his accustomed rides in the New Forcats he saw a laboring man burning lime, and entered into familiar conversation with him, asking to be obliged with his surname. The man replied that it was Purkiss. Now, this was the reply that was sought, and Palmerston exclaimed. "I thought as much." He accordingly asked the man if he were descended from the lime-ourner of that name who carted away the body of William Rufus after his unfortunate fall by the arrow of Sir Welter Tyrrel. The man naswered in the affirmative. "Then give me your hand," said his lordship, "for though you are a laborer. I must not forget that you are a brother Hampshire man," at the same time handing the man (if my memory serves me) the medium of procuring some refreshment at his earliest cessation from toil, "Thus," said his lordship in relating the incident, "I have had the great honor of conversing with an honest workingman, who is descended from the oldest family and bears the oldest surname in England."

A Fort Smith (Ark.) telegram says: A shooting affray occurred at a dance at Deep Fork, in the Creek Nation, last Wednesday morning at daylight, in which Samuel Haines and Samuel Suchie, two Indians, were mortally wounded by John Tiger, also of the Creek Nation. Tiger escaped. After the council of the ministers at the Erace-Saturday, Prime Minister Ferry held an interview with Li Fong Pao, the Chinese Ambassador. At the meeting it was arranged that China should pay France as indemnity of 20,000,000 francs. A pacific solution of the troubles is now certain.
